Understanding Factors Influencing Financial Exploitation among Diverse Samples of Older Adults

The specific aims of this project are (1) to examine the impact of financial scam susceptibility (exposure and vulnerability) on incidence of financial exploitation (FE); (2) to examine the impact of socio-demographic factors (e.g., age, education) and social integration/isolation on scam susceptibility and FE; (3) To examine the impact of general cognitive abilities and financial skills/advice and support (a) on scam susceptibility and FE; and (b) as mediators of relationships between socio-demographic factors, social integration/isolation, scam susceptibility and FE; and (4) To examine the impact of psychosocial factors (trust, impulsivity, and depression) on scam susceptibility and FE. Understanding multiple pathways for FE is important for the development of interventions to heighten awareness and minimize risk.

Identifying Predictors of Poor Health-Related Quality of Life among Pediatric Hematopoietic Stem Cell Donors

This project focuses on the physical, psychological, and emotional experiences of children who donate stem cells to an ill sibling. Data will be collected via telephone interviews with pediatric donors and their family members. Findings will be used to design interventions to improve quality-of-life in donors and their families.

R01DK114085-01 (NIH) Jhamb (PI) 7/5/17- 6/30/22
Technology Assisted Stepped Collaborative Care Intervention (TASCCI) to Improve Patient Centered Outcomes in Hemodialysis Patients

The goal of the proposed TASCCI study is to test the effectiveness of a stepped collaborative care approach for alleviating patient reported symptoms and improving quality of life in a multi-center randomized controlled trial of 150 diverse hemodialysis patients from Pennsylvania and New Mexico. We will compare the effectiveness of our 12-week intervention of pharmacologic and/or behavioral-therapy (technology-delivered) with an attention control arm of health education to improve key patient-centered outcomes and explore the effect on inflammatory biomarkers.

The Caregiver Project

This project will involve systematically gathering and translating research evidence into sound policy and practice improvements that will make Western Pennsylvania a model for a nationwide "culture of caregiving." Informal caregivers increasingly play an important role in providing health care for millions of chronically ill and disabled Americans, often significantly reducing hospitalizations and nursing home stays. We can be a region in which healthcare providers, employers, and communities collaborate to meaningfully improve the lives and health of informal caregivers and their care recipients.

Factors Contributing to Oral Health Disparities in Appalachia

The long-term goal of this research is to determine the sources of oral health disparity in a high risk Northern Appalachian population so that targeted preventive interventions can be designed.

1R01 HL130388-01 (NIH) Switzer (PI) 2/1/16-1/31/19
Improving the Availability of Younger Unrelated Hematopoietic Stem Cell Donors

Younger potential unrelated hematopoietic stem cell (HSC) donors aged 18-30 are both the most clinically desirable and least available to donate after having preliminarily matched a patient in need of an HSC transplant. The ultimate goal of the proposed investigation is to improve availability of this younger donor group.

Mindfulness Meditation Training in Lonely Older Adults

The broad aim of this research is to evaluate whether mindfulness meditation training reduces loneliness and inflammatory disease risk in lonely older adults. Lonely older adults (aged 55+ years) are a population that is increasing in size in the United States relative to other segments of the population and they have significantly elevated health risks (e.g., increased inflammation, cardiovascular disease, depression, and mortality). Interventions that can reduce loneliness have significant potential to reduce the health risks and mortality in this growing but understudied patient population.

U1QHP28736-01 (HRSA) Schulz (PI) 7/1/15-6/30/19
Geriatrics Workforce Enhancement Program (GWEP)

The GWEP is a consortium of the Univ. of Pittsburgh, the VA Pittsburgh Healthcare System, Penn State Univ., and UPMC, with Pitt as the lead institution. Through this collaboration we are able to provide interprofessional training and access to resources for older adults and their families throughout HHS Region III.

Self-management via Health Kiosk by Community-residing Older Adults

This project will study older adults' views, motivations, and patterns of use of an adaptive, community-based, multi-user health kiosk over 18 months of study participation. The goal is to understand how and why older adults use a health kiosk to live a healthier lifestyle and monitor and manage selected chronic conditions.

Increasing Equity in Transplant Evaluation and Living Donor Kidney Transplantation

We will test the efficacy and cost effectiveness of a comprehensive, system-level fast-track kidney transplant evaluation for minorities in reducing time to complete transplant evaluation. And, using a randomized-controlled trial, we will test the effectiveness of an educational video and booklet to encourage discussion and pursuit of living donor kidney transplant.

Does a New Supermarket Improve Dietary Behaviors of Low-income African Americans?

This study examines the impact of the introduction of a full-service grocery store into a predominantly African American, low income, urban neighborhood on food purchasing behaviors and diet. The study uses a matched quasi-experimental design in which the grocery store neighborhood and a demographically similar neighborhood with no grocery store are compared pre- and post-store introduction.

Measuring and Improving Colonoscopy Quality Using Natural Language Processing

The major goals of this project are to use a natural language processing (NLP) – based computer software application for measuring the quality of colonoscopies (C-QUAL) to: (1) measure colonoscopy quality; (2) understand what drives variation in colonoscopy quality; and (3) improve colonoscopy quality using provider feedback in a sample of physicians.

Impact of Greenspace Improvement on Physical Activity in a Low Income Community

The major goals of this project are to examine the extent that greenspace renovations will result in increased physical activity (PA), including more active transport and utilization of greenspace (i.e., parks, outdoor stairwells, connecting trails). Further, we will examine to the extent to which effects are mediated by social cognitive factors and moderated by perceived accessibility, social cohesion, and safety.

H-USE: Home User Security Behavior Study

The major goals of this project are to establish a panel of home internet users whose security behavior will be monitored over time. Such a panel will combine tracking, survey, and experiment data, enabling multi-disciplinary researchers to gain unprecedented access to and understanding of end users' and hackers' security mindsets, trade-offs, and behaviors.

5R01 AG041778-02 (NIH) Kamarck (PI) 4/1/13-6/31/18
Social Integration, daily social interaction and health risk pathways in midlife

The major goals of this project are test whether features of daily social interaction account for associations between (1) social integration (SI) and positive and negative affect during daily life;

(2) SI and negative daily health behaviors; and (3) SI and biological pathways potentially linked with disease risk.

An Examination of Resident Abuse in Assisted Living Facilities

In this proposal, we build on our prior pilot work on elder abuse, and propose to examine resident abuse in assisted living facilities (ALFs). Six categories of elder abuse will be examined (i.e., verbal, physical, material, psychological, medication, and sexual abuse). The proposal has three specific aims: (1) Examine resident abuse from family and staff reported by nurse aides in a nationally representative sample of ALFs; (2) Expand the scope of our understanding of resident abuse by including medication abuse in ALFs; and (3) Identify facility practices in ALFs that nurse aides and Directors of Nursing believe prevent or contribute to abuse of residents.

A2ALL Cohort Study: Psychosocial and Surgical Outcomes

The major goals of this project are to study the short- and long-term effects of Adult Living Donor Liver Transplantation (ALDLT) on the donor and recipient and to gain insight into unique donor and recipient issues through study of this innovative procedure, which will be achieved by full participation in the A2ALL consortium in collaboration with other transplant centers and the data coordinating center.
